HISTORICAL

The CENTURY was founded, and its first Constitution adopted, January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association, of which number forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders. Forty-six others joined during the year.

The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, it was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended March 29, 1883.

From the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849 it occupied rooms at No. 495 Broadway.

From the spring of 1849 to the spring of 1850 it occupied rooms at No. 435 Broome Street.

From the spring of 1850 to May, 1852, it occupied rooms at No. 575 Broadway.

From May, 1852, to the spring of 1857, it occupied the house at No. 24 Clinton Place (now No. 46 East 8th Street).

From the spring of 1857 to January 5, 1891, it occupied the house at No. 109 (old No. 42) East Fifteenth Street.

On January 10, 1891 it removed to its present club-house, No. 7 West Forty-third Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700; April 3, 1958, 800.

On May 4, 1901, John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, only surviving members of The Column, a literary society founded in 1825, presented to The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The silver memorial column bears a lamp which since 1858 had burned at every meeting of The Column and is now lighted at each gathering of The Century.

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

The year 1958 was marked with regret for the retirement of Theodore M. Bolton, Librarian for the past thirty-two years.

Mr. Bolton was so much a part of the Century scene that it is difficult to think of the Library without him. His broad cultural interests, his knowledge of literature, and his sensitive appreciation of the Fine Arts, especially Architecture, made his presence seem almost indispensable. Anyone seeking specific information of any kind would receive not only that, but new leads, new outlooks from little-known sources, in whatever research he might be pursuing or in response to a casual question.

Theodore Bolton not only knew all about the books of which he was curator but loved them for both format and content: their thoughts and words and especially their illustrations, as would be natural to a calligrapher, artist, and one-time architectural draftsman of exquisite skill. There is, besides, no living person who can outmatch his knowledge of American Architecture, and it is hoped that his new leisure may enable him to complete his summary of that subject, of which only a few parts have been published. He was, as well, a lover of the stage; many members will recall his characterization of Booth's Hamlet at the Century Centennial. His modesty was so great that few, even of his many friends in the Association, were aware of the extent and variety of his accomplishments.

Under the aegis of this scholar and gentleman, the Century Library possessed a peculiarly intimate and friendly quality, for he knew where every book stood on the shelves, what it looked like from the outside, and what was in it even to the very page. This made the Library a very pleasant place for many, and we express gratitude, hoping that our Librarian Emeritus will continue to make use, as he may have need, of the great collection of which he was presiding genius and host for so many years.

Mr. Bolton was succeeded briefly by Mr. Henry James, Jr., whose able and agreeable administration was terminated at the end of the year on account of injuries received just before he took up his duties. During the time he was with us he made many recommendations which will be of value. His successor is Mr. Lewis Hammond Webster. The Assistant Librarian is Mr. Andrew Zaremba.

The Library has been improved by various new furnishings, including chairs and lamps provided by the House Committee, making it a more pleasant place for casual reading as well as for study and research. It is hoped that author-members will find it suited for writing—with pencil, pen, or typewriter.

On Saturday, November 22nd, a Literary Afternoon was held in the Gallery for members and their guests, with an attendance of over two hundred. John Mason Brown presided, and the speakers on "Aspects of Biography" were Jacques Barzun, Leon Edel, and August Heckscher, who with a brilliant talk substituted at short notice for Wilmarth Sheldon Lewis. The success of the meeting suggests the desirability of similar meetings in the future.

It is perhaps not known to all members of the Association that there exists in a special vault a collection of literary treasures which may be seen upon request.

Under a new rule members may, upon application to the Librarian, borrow certain types of books from the Library for limited periods.

During the year the Library has been enriched, particularly in its collection of books on the Fine Arts, by many gifts from members and expenditure of income from the Bryant Fund, specifically devoted to such works. Four hundred twenty-five volumes have been added, including current fiction, and of these more than fifty have "Century connections" as noted in the Bulletin.

Denver Lindley, Chairman

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

The House Committee, which might well be characterized as "iron men" because all members of the team have played full time for two years without substitutions, has continued to devote itself to the physical comfort and the intellectual entertainment of Centurions.

The principal problems of the past year have been financial, particularly the maintenance of high standards in the restaurant and bar in the face of steadily rising costs. In this connection, it is reassuring to note that the number of meals served in the Clubhouse has steadily increased. This, of course, includes the dinners and luncheons served in the private dining rooms, which are now air conditioned and therefore highly desirable in summer temperatures as well as in winter.

Electrical replacements and repairs have been carried out to reinforce our aging electrical installation, and general maintenance items have been attended to.

The administrative reorganizations which have been achieved through the guidance of the Treasurer are functioning satisfactorily, with efficiency increasing as the staff becomes more experienced.

As usual, the Committee has sought to provide the monthly meetings with a radically varied assortment of Centurion speakers. At the January meeting, the well-known radio commentator, Quincy Howe, spoke with as little gloom as possible about what he thought the coming year would bring, while in February John D. Gordan, Curator of the Berg Collection at the New York Public Library, gave a charming talk on "Gifts of Love," the gifts in question being inscribed books from the Berg Collection. At the March meeting, the Club was honored to be addressed by Vincent Massey, the Governor-General of Canada, whose subject was "The Sceptre and the Mace in Canada." In April, we were all entertained and baffled by that distinguished amateur of magic and E.S.P., Carl Newton, who knows more about making things disappear than most lawyers would dare to admit they did. Jacques Barzun, who fears the disappearance of intelligible English, spoke on this subject in May, in a talk beguilingly entitled "Is M. Jourdain Dying?" At the June meeting, according to tradition, there was no speaker, the membership being presumed to prefer an evening of informal fellowship before going its different ways for the summer.

In October, the Dinner of Welcome to New Members was delighted to be not only addressed but marvellously sung to by Judge Learned Hand, who gave an unforgettable rendition of "The Sarpent of Springfield Mountain." In what is rapidly becoming a tradition of the Century, the November meeting was made the occasion of a robust wine festival—this time in happy memory of Francis Taylor and Mahonri Young. At the December meeting, the Hamilton College Choir presented a remarkable program of secular and religious songs, which put the membership in the best possible mood for a Merry Christmas.

On behalf of the membership, the House Committee records its thanks for the following gifts made during the year: trout and fresh vegetables from Edward Ridley Finch; fresh salmon from C. Otto V. Kienbusch and Frank L. Babbott; fresh salmon from Whitney H. Shepardson.

With the advent of the new procedure adopted by the Board of Management, this committee will serve until June, 1959, but to insure continuity all of the members of the new committee will be invited to attend the regular meetings of the House Committee, beginning in April.

Richard A. Kimball, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MUSIC

In 1958 the afternoon concerts for Centurions and their guests, which for many years had been given on Sundays, were changed to Saturdays. The change not only accomplished substantial economies, permitting the application of more of the Committee's budget to music, but also, from the point of view of attendance, apparently proved that Saturday afternoon is a very satisfactory time for the membership.

The Saturday afternoon programs of the year were as follows:

Saturday, January 18—Ralph Kirkpatrick, Harpsichordist
Saturday, February 15—Program of chamber music by the Stradivarius Society under the direction of Gerald Warburg
Saturday, March 8—"Music for Television" by Norman Dello Joio, in which Mr. Dello Joio presented one of the programs from the 26-week Television series "Airpower" and discussed the score he composed for the series.

The Music Committee arranged for the concert of Christmas music by the Hamilton College Glee Club on the occasion of the December Monthly Meeting.

The Committee also sponsored a Fortnightly Dinner on December 9th to continue the previous year's discussion of music and musicians in the Century.

John E. Lockwood, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON HONORS

Award of a testimonial to Charles C. Burlingham. The Committee recommended to the Board of Management that a testimonial be prepared and appropriately engrossed for presentation to Charles C. Burlingham on his one hundredth birthday, on August 31, 1958. At their meeting on February 26, 1958, the Board adopted the recommendation by acclamation, and requested the Committee to prepare the testimonial and have it engrossed. It was presented to Mr. Burlingham on his birthday by Harvey Stevenson, a member of the Board of Management. It is appropriate to record here that Mr. Burlingham was elected to the Association in 1893; he is the oldest member and its first centenarian.

Gilmore D. Clarke, Chairman

OTHER MATTERS

Amendments to the Constitution and By-Laws. At the Monthly Meeting on April 2, 1959, the Association adopted amendments to Section 8 of Article VI of the Constitution, raising the annual dues of Resident Members to $150 and those of Non-Resident Members to $75. On March 5, Section e of By-Law 4 was amended to permit certain classes of guests of the Association to entertain visitors in the Clubhouse. They are those to whom the privileges of the Clubhouse have been extended by the Board of Management: "distinguished strangers visiting the City" (Constitution, Article IV), and "authors, artists, and composers of music" (By-Law 4, Section j). In the future, these gentlemen may entertain their friends in the dining room and other parts of the Clubhouse. These amendments are included in the Constitution and By-Laws as printed in this Year-Book.

Resident Artist Members Counted as Non-Resident. By resolution of the Board of Management in December, 1958, Resident Artist Members who elect to be classified as Non-Resident Members under the provisions of Section 3 of Article VI of the Constitution, are to be counted as Non-Resident Members in determining the number of members in each class. They had previously been counted as Resident Members.

ARTICLE VI

Of the Members

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding eight hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

§ 3. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absent members shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of members. In case the return of an absent member shall increase the number in his class of membership above the limit prescribed, no new member in that class shall be elected until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of voting and of holding office. [Amended April 3, 1947.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. Non-resident members may at any time, on and after the 30th April, 1896, be transferred from the list of resident members upon application in writing to the Treasurer. The members so transferred shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended February 1896.]

Non-resident members shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association, except the right of voting and of holding office. They shall be subject to the Constitution and By-Laws and to all the regulations of the Association.

§ 6. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 7. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise. [Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 8. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred fifty dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be seventy-five dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter. [Amended April 2, 1959.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 9. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by an affirmative vote by ballot of not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office. [Amended, April 5, 1956.]

§ 10. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 11. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII

Of Meetings

§ 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Thursday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P.M.

§ 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Thursday of November, December, February, March, April, May and June at 9 o'clock P.M. [Amended June 3, 1941.]

§ 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

§ 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII

Of Amendments

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee. A member may not introduce the same person as a daily guest more than twice in the calendar year, and may not introduce more than one daily guest on the same day.

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management

A member may not obtain from the House Committee such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time. [Amended May 6, 1954.]

(e) Guests to whom the privileges of the Association are extended under Section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution or under paragraphs (a), (d), or (j) of this By-law are on the same footing as non-resident members, except that those to whom the privileges are extended under paragraphs (a) and (d) may not introduce visitors and except that no guest may be present at any business meeting of the Association. Nor shall the House Committee grant the same privileges to the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. [Amended March 5, 1959.]

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Management may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association. Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its last spring meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the November monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the November monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in November, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail. The letters of proposers and seconders are deposited in the archives, and all other letters are destroyed, except that, by a two-thirds vote of the Committee, any particular letter may be preserved in the archives. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.
2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.
3. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.
4. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

5. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

"AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS"

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 3, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word "amateur" in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words "amateurs of letters and the fine arts" as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companions in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century's membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents for a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsive sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

THE CENTURY MEMORIALS

BY THE HISTORIAN

[Editor's Note—At the time of his death on January 4, 1959, George Martin, then Historian of the Association, had not completed the Memorials of 15 of the Centurions who died in 1958. These have been written by Roger Burlingame, his successor, and are designated by "RB" at the end of each.]

Samuel Hopkins Adams

Sam Adams was born alongside the Erie Canal, in what is known as the classical district of New York, and graduated from Hamilton in 1891. He started out as a reporter on the Sun, and then worked into writing articles for McClure and Norman Hapgood, investigating and exposing frauds and corruption—particularly patent medicines—in the early years of the century. From these so-called "muckraking" pieces, he moved into fiction-writing, where he was exceedingly successful. As he went along, his novels and stories became more artistic and less propagandistic, and some of them were made into motion pictures.

Sam came from upstate, and that is where his heart was always. He lived on the shore of Owasco Lake, just outside of Auburn, and he wrote stories about the early days of the Erie Canal and the finger-lake country. He knew all the folks up that way, and he liked them and they liked him. There is a broad belt of civilization that runs from Boston to Buffalo where, on the whole, the people are gentle, and cultivated, and interested in education quite beyond the inhabitants of other parts of the land. The great City of New York levies a heavy toll on youthful ability upstate, but it did not seduce

Sam. He went right back to Cayuga County, and delivered his thunderbolts from there all the latter part of his life.

He worked hard at writing. He used to get up at six, write till breakfast, and then write along till noon, when he had a martini and lunch. He was never happier than when in a group of his friends, and he constantly had people staying with him. He had a favorite old song:

When we got to Albany,
The right mule he dropped dead;
The left mule got blind staggers,
So we hit him on the head.
The Erie is rising;
The gin is getting low;
And I hardly think we'll get a drink
Till we reach Buffalo.

Edward Campbell Aswell

Edward Aswell was born in Nashville; and was establishing himself in the shoe business in Chicago at a time when he ought to have been in a preparatory school. In the course of this it came to him that the shoe business was not for him, so he went to night school, entered Harvard on a scholarship, and graduated in 1926, magna cum laude.

At Harvard he was a member of the Student Council, and he drew up in literary form the House Plan, which was to have such a sweeping effect on both Harvard and Yale. There are some that think President Lowell originated and organized the idea; but, in any case, Ed certainly became astonishingly famous as the author of the exposition, and President Lowell, who was anything but disinterested, saw to it that the report was published and widely circulated.

When Ed graduated, he was marked by the literati; and he went to work as assistant editor on the old Forum, which was then being conducted 'round the upper reaches of the zenith by Harry Leach. Next he went to the Atlantic Monthly, and finally to Harper's, where he switched from editing magazines to books. In 1947 he became Editor-in-Chief of the McGraw-Hill general book publishing division; and he ended a long and distinguished career as Senior Editor at Doubleday.

In this progress Ed was exceedingly useful to the firms for which he worked. For McGraw-Hill and for Harper's he secured a score of first-class writers, and apparently he did this simply by talking with them and gaining their confidence. He was understanding and considerate, and even the most temperamental authors got along with him. He shared with Maxwell Perkins the difficult task of editing the books of Thomas Wolfe, and in 1947 he became trustee of Wolfe's literary estate. One of his important ventures was to negotiate the complicated purchase and publication of the Boswell papers in this country.

Ed was a man of outstanding competence, and he has left his mark on the written word of our time. He was of serious mien—solemn, perhaps—and not given to mirth and laughter: rather to sermons and soda water. Nevertheless, he saw life steadily, and saw it whole.

Ernest Ludlow Bogart

Ernest Bogart graduated from Princeton (Phi Beta Kappa) in 1890, and then studied in Germany. He was an economist; and in 1909 he joined the faculty of the University of Illinois and taught economics there until he retired in 1938. Then he came to live in New York, where he lectured at New York University for some years. It was at this time that he was elected to the Club.

Bogart was a very useful person and did whatever came along. He was economic adviser to the State Department during the First World War, and financial adviser to the government of Iran in the middle twenties. He wrote and published twenty-eight books, mostly dealing with economic history and problems of water and agriculture and population.

Economics is an esoteric philosophy. It is the dark suspicion of the uninitiated that it is simply a lingo dealing with the kind of pseudo-problems that occupied the learned men and the universities in the middle ages. Some say the economic consequences of the peace are thus and so; but others maintain quite the opposite. They speak of "higher" and "lower" standards of living. and these turn out to be descriptions of plumbing. Some say it is a good thing to pump all the oil out of our soil as fast as we can under the "protection" of a tariff, but others contend that we ought to save it against time of war, and meanwhile import oil from foreign lands. Some say that raising wages raises the price of what labor produces, but others regard this statement as obvious Communism.

Well, it is a hazardous field. Bogart adopted a position of neutralism, like Nehru; and contended himself with recording the facts of matters without trying to deliver himself of a message for the world. He was an historian, not a crusader; and he got along very well indeed. He used to play chess in the Club. It is a good game: the rules haven't been changed in five hundred years; and Bogart, who was fed up with chasing mountebanks 'round the arena, found it soothing and satisfactory.

Henry Bruere

Henry Bruere was born in Missouri. He studied at Cornell for two years and then went to the University of Chicago, where he took the Ph.B. in 1901, when he was nineteen years old. He then studied law at Harvard and at N.Y.U. and was admitted to the Bar in 1911. This diversity or diffuseness of his formal education presaged the variety of his employments in later life. He was continually getting interesting jobs, performing them very well, and then going off to something new, and immediate, and important.

In 1911 he was the head of the Bureau of City Betterment of the Citizens Union, which later became the Bureau of Municipal Research, and he became exceedingly involved in the Fusion movement that elected John Purroy Mitchell mayor in 1913. Mitchell took Bruere into his cabinet as City Chamberlain; and there he reorganized the entire fiscal structure and gave the City its first budget system. True to his ideals, he startled the community in 1916 by recommending the abolition of his own job in the interests of business efficiency, and, to prove his point, resigned.

After this, he became financial adviser to the Mexican Government, then he was appointed by President Wilson to the State Department, and later he was repeatedly drafted by President Roosevelt for difficult assignments.

Meanwhile, hounded by the common necessity of earning a living, he worked for various large corporations, finally winding up, in 1930, as President of the Bowery Savings Bank. This position he held to the last, becoming honorary chairman of the board in 1952. The job answered all his purposes: it involved problems in which he was expert, it paid him enough so that he didn't have to think about money, and the small exactions of time and effort left him abundant opportunity to pursue collateral matters that interested him. And these outside interests were legion and never-ending. They varied from the New York Public Library to the Citizens' Committee for Better Housing, from the Twentieth Century Fund to the Boy Scouts of America.

Henry was animated by a spirit of perennial youth. He didn't seem to get old and tired like the rest of us. He was always having new ideas and the energy to do something about them. His beau ideal was John Purroy Mitchell, whom he knew and worked with when they were both young; and he looked to see him again, as Ulysses looked for the great Achilles, with whom he had fought far on the ringing plains of windy Troy.

Clinton Hoadley Crane

Although he was a member for fifty-five years, Clinton Crane was not often in the Century Clubhouse. But he was well-known by reputation to that sizable group of nautical enthusiasts who are so often heard telling their adventures of cruise and race at the round table. For he was an able yacht designer—professionally, at first, later as a hobby.

Born in 1873 in Englewood, New Jersey, Crane graduated from Harvard in 1894. He then spent three years studying engineering and naval architecture at the University of Glasgow. From 1900 to 1913, as a member of the firm of Tams, Lemoine, and Crane, he designed many large and celebrated yachts, including Vanadis, Aloha I, and Aloha II. His speed boat, Dixie I, brought the Harmsworth trophy to the United States, and her successor, Dixie II, defended it.

In 1913, he became interested in lead mining. As president of the St. Joseph Lead Company, he directed its growth until it became the country's largest lead producer. Meanwhile the company had also gone in for zinc mining and erected a zinc smelter near Pittsburgh. During the First World War, Crane served under Bernard Baruch on the War Industries Board and later became president of the Lead Industries Association.

Notwithstanding these activities, he continued to design yachts. His was the six meter Lanai, which brought the Seewanhaka cup back from Norway. He designed several 8- and 12-meter sloops for himself. One of these was Gleam, the subject of one of Rosenfeld's best known "Spinnaker" pictures. In 1929, he designed Weetamoe, a J-class contender for the honor of defending the America's Cup.

In 1941, he suffered an automobile accident which injured him so badly that only a miracle of surgery could restore him to an active life. From his hospital bed he gave a graphic account of his condition. "Until I looked at my legs," he wrote, "I did not know I was seriously hurt, but there was the right leg bent at right angles just above the knee, and the left leg bent at right angles above the ankle. I knew they were my legs because I recognized the pants."

Clinton Crane's book Yachting Memories published in 1952 has instructed and entertained many a lover of the sport.—RB

Elmer Holmes Davis

Elmer Davis was born in Aurora, Indiana. The chief local enterprise was the making of coffins, and the only excitement an occasional Ohio River flood. Elmer graduated from Franklin College in 1910, and then went to Oxford (Queens College) as a Rhodes Scholar. He graduated in 1912, came home the next year, and worked for ten years on the Times. Somewhere along the line he got a most remarkably good education —mostly due, no doubt, to abilities he was born with.

By 1924 he was ready to free-lance, and he produced a stream of essays and short stories. He was writing a mystery novel in 1939, when he was asked by C.B.S. to broadcast the news as a fill-in for H. V. Kaltenborn.

News broadcasting in those days was heavily larded with pomposity and unction, and Elmer's complete elimination of all this affectation and mannerism was startling. In two years he was the foremost analyst and distiller of war news in the country. He could put more into a paragraph than many men could squeeze into a column, more in a five-minute broadcast than others could put into half an hour. He gave no quarter to expediency; he thought sharply and accurately; he had a kind of humorous understatement that derived from the irony of events; he had a tough mind and a tender heart.

He was more than a reporter, however. He was a philosopher, novelist, essayist, and classical scholar. He mastered the whole range of his craft. He could describe and explain, and he could expose and destroy hypocrisy more fairly and succinctly than Mencken at his best. His novel, Giant Killer, about David, is really about all politicians, and is truly wonderful. Needless to say, David didn't kill Goliath: Joab did.

At the last, he left a testament, a little book, But We Were Born Free, praising and defending the right to think and speak the truth as each of us sees it. This book is an exciting, bobsled run, fast and downhill, with the steersman telling us to hold on tight and not to be afraid, for the momentum of a sledful of free men may even carry us to a higher point than the start—contrary to all the laws of physics.

The tour leads, inevitably, to the apologists for Senator McCarthy, who pretend that the disgusting performance was worth while, because it brought the evils of Communism home to the electorate. "This," says Elmer, "amounts to saying that nothing brings the danger of fire more to the attention of the public than turning in false alarms all over town." Well (to steal Elmer's favorite word), the Captains and the Kings depart; and so also McCarthy and his times.

To the man from Aurora (a name that means "the break of day") the ancient liberties of the people were very real, and with his salt and his truth he made them real for others. "Don't be afraid," he would say. "Believe what you believe! Say what you think!"

He concluded one of his essays: "We have got to defeat this attack on the freedom of the mind; and I think we can defeat it if enough of us stand up against it—enough of all kinds of people, rich and poor, young and old. But it takes courage for a young man with a family to stand up to it; all the more obligation on those of us who have nothing left to lose. At any age it is better to be a dead lion than a living dog—though better still, of course, to be a living and victorious lion; but it is easier to run the risk of being killed (or fired) in action, if before long you are going to be dead anyway. This freedom seems to me the chief consolation of old age."

If there is a future life, be sure that Elmer is there talking with Socrates and Galileo and Voltaire; and Cato the Censor is having a poor time.

Kenneth Mackenzie Day

Kenneth Day graduated from the School of Architecture of the University of Pennsylvania in 1922. He was an architect, as his father was before him. His father had been president of the American Institute of Architects, and distinguished for traditional work. Kenneth reacted against this, and became a devotee of modern sociological functionalism somewhat after the manner of George Howe. When he was president of the Architectural Alumni Society of Pennsylvania in 1935, he tried mightily to have that School alter its curriculum along the "modernist" lines being followed at Harvard; but that step occurred after his time under a new Dean.

Kenneth's interest in functionalism led him into designing group housing and low-cost housing developments, which are hard work, not very remunerative, and subject to the frustrations involved in dealing with government boards and profit-minded contractors. He kept at it, nevertheless, and among other things was principally responsible for the famous Mill Creek project in West Philadelphia. He also was for many years a director of the Octavia Hill Association, a Philadelphia slum-clearance enterprise that repaired and rented houses in old sections of the city.

All his life he was essentially an unreconstructed rebel, but very pleasant withal and respectfully regarded by the profession: indeed, when he died he was president of the Pennsylvania Society of Architects. Being interviewed once on phases of architectural design and practice, he remarked: "I detect some progress in honesty of expression, but a net retrograde tendency caused by vulgar materialism and an inordinate amount of time devoted to motion. The energy, time, and money once devoted to great architecture (the Pyramids, Parthenon, et al.) is devoted today to highways and to automobiles. Motion has replaced thought."

Eh bien, chacun à son goût.

On September 19, 1777, Dr. Johnson (likewise a peripatetic philosopher) wrote to Boswell: "If I had no duties, and no reference to futurity, I would spend my life in driving briskly in a post-chaise with a pretty woman."

George Debevoise

It is rare indeed for us to have six members of the same family with us in the Century all at the same time. But until last year there were six Debevoise Centurions: the brothers, George, Thomas, and Paul, George's sons, George Douglass, and Robert, and Thomas's son, Eli Whitney. George was the oldest; at the time of his death he was ninety-three. He had been a member for thirty-nine years.

He was the son of a lieutenant in Hawkins's Zouaves, an organization in the Union army in the Civil War. The elder Debevoise was wounded in the Battle of Roanoke Island.

George was in the class of 1884 in the College of the City of New York but did not graduate with his class. Instead he went into the paint business as salesman for Devoe, Reynolds, and Company. During the first decade of the new century, he founded the Debevoise Company, of which he was president until 1945. After that, the business was managed by his sons.

Naturally gregarious, George Debevoise had almost countless friends. His social activities—many of them in the church of which he was an active member—were varied and useful. He was exceedingly generous, going out of his way to help friends who were in trouble or in need.

To his brothers and sisters he was known as "the gentle bearded saint."—RB

Thomas McElrath Debevoise

Another member of the Debevoise family—a younger brother of George—left us in December. Thomas Debevoise had been a Centurion for thirty-one years. We did not see him at the Club as often as we should have liked because the exceptionally wide range of his professional activities kept him so busy, but he did come, when he could, for lunch.

Thomas Debevoise was born in New York City in 1874. He took his A.B. at Yale in 1895 and his LL.B. at the New York Law School in 1897.

From the age of thirty until his death, Debevoise's life was dedicated to service as counsel to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. He took great pride in this work, which involved much responsibility.

In his intervals of relaxation, he was an adroit fly fisherman and spent what time he could spare for this sport at the Tahawus Club in the Adirondacks. A fellow Centurion who was associated with him in his legal work and who also saw him at play remembers a connection between the two aspects of his talent. "In his professional practice," this colleague says, "I came to recognize the same patience, tenacity, grace, expertness and precision which were present in the casting of a fly upon an occupied pool. He pursued the word almost in the same way in which he pursued a fish. He wanted the right word and the word which he could use with grace and attractiveness and disarming effectiveness."

His friends remember him too as a teller of stories. His deadpan face which never relaxed during the narrative made each whiplash ending doubly effective.

Thomas Debevoise married Miss Anne Farnam Whitney, a direct descendant of the inventor, Eli Whitney, for whom their son is named.—RB

Frederick May Eliot

Frederick M. Eliot prepared at Roxbury Latin School, and graduated from Harvard in 1911. He intended to become a teacher in the field of municipal government, but after studying for a year in Europe, it came to him that he wanted to be a minister. He accordingly returned to Cambridge and in 1915 graduated from the Harvard Divinity School, and in the same year was ordained and appointed assistant minister at the First Parish Church (Unitarian) in Cambridge.

He went off to the First World War as a chaplain; and when it was over, he was appointed minister to Unity Church in St. Paul. There he lived and worked with great contentment till 1937, when he was elected President of the American Unitarian Association. This brought him back to Boston, and he lived in Cambridge the rest of his life. He remarked of himself that he spent his time "trying to discover how to make a highly individualistic church into an efficient instrumentality for the advance of liberal religion."

Eliot was a dignified man of high seriousness, not noticeably afflicted with fundamental doubts. He was chaplain of the Massachusetts Senate, and a trustee of Andover, of Hackley School, and of Mount Holyoke College; and to these distinguished positions he brought a ready willingness to do his share and a wholesome, common-sense point of view. He was aware of the world, and what goes on in it; and, though he was not of the stature of Emerson or President Eliot, he was a worthy exemplar of the austere tradition in which they are great figures.

Frederick Augustus Eustis

Fred Eustis was born in Milton, prepared at Milton Academy, and graduated from Harvard in 1901. He had an identical twin brother, who did exactly the same. When Cameron Forbes was Governor-General of the Philippines, his mother lamented that he was getting out of touch with the good people of Milton; but Fred was not subjected to this risk, for he lived in Milton all his life.

He acquired a kind of momentum at Harvard, and after graduating from the College he took an A.M. in 1902, an S.M. in 1903, and, a little later, an S.D. He was a metallurgical engineer; and, after leaving Harvard, he went into his father's office in Boston and occupied himself in the management of properties wholly or largely owned by his family, consisting of mines, reduction works, and water powers. He also did research work—mostly on smoke-filters, water power exploitation, and metallurgical problems.

During the First World War, he went to Washington and worked on the Shipping Board, where he was very useful indeed. This got him out in the world, and brought him into contact with lively men who knew nothing of Boston. He liked this, and it was good for him.

Fred was a modest, unassuming man, but quite impossible to push around. He was thoroughly competent in his field of engineering and aware of what was currently going on in the world of applied science. He was a very pleasant gentleman, tolerant, polite, forthcoming—the bright product of one of the most interesting centres of civilization in America.

Arthur Woolsey Ewell

Arthur W. Ewell was born in Bradford, Massachusetts, and graduated from Yale (Phi Beta Kappa) in 1897. He took the Ph.D. in 1899, and afterward studied at Johns Hopkins, University of Berlin, and the Radium Institute in Paris. He was a physicist.

He taught physics at Yale, and eventually became a full professor and director of the physics and general science departments. In the interim, he was involved with all sorts of complicated problems, and became a recognized authority on artificial rotatory polarization, magnetic double refraction, electrolytic electrode potentials, and various curious properties of light and gases. In short, he was a learned and distinguished physicist.

He was apparently well endowed; for he had a big house near Ipswich, with an appropriate messuage, where he gave very pleasant dinner parties to very pleasant people. (Every little while some charming Yale man is accepted in these ultra-Harvard areas.)

Ewell was a modest, quiet gentleman, and an exceedingly effective scientist. His field of endeavor changed and expanded fabulously during his lifetime; but he was in the forefront all the time, pressing on the frontiers of knowledge, fitting the new-found facts into men's understanding, and putting them to work.

Robert Herndon Fife

Robert H. Fife graduated from the University of Virginia in 1895. He was born in Charlottesville, of an old Virginia family, and after going through "the University" he studied at Goettingen and Leipzig, taking a Ph.D. from the latter in 1902. It must be observed that this is not the usual course for a scion of the Southern aristocracy; but Fife was not at all usual. He had the makings of a great scholar; and eventually he became the outstanding authority in the country in the field of German language and literature.

He came back to America in 1903 and commenced teaching, first at Western Reserve, and then at Wesleyan University in Connecticut, where he was Taft Professor of German. In 1920 he was appointed head of the Department of Germanic Languages at Columbia, and there he worked the rest of his life. His erudition was not limited to German: having travelled widely, he was familiar with many lands and peoples, from the Egyptians to the Scandinavians. In the early days of the Second World War he got up a series of intensive courses in Egyptian-Arabic, Russian, and modern Persian in summer sessions at Columbia, in an effort to equip some Americans with the tools of diplomacy—pointing out the alarming lack of facility in modern languages that is characteristic of American education.

He wrote several learned books; and his masterpiece, The Revolt of Martin Luther, was fortunately completed and published shortly before his death. As faculty chairman he was patient, tactful, and courteous; and with the students who worked under him he was indefatigable, taking immense trouble over not-very-promising dissertations.

Fife was a Virginian, but he was Scotch, not Cavalier; and he fulfilled his appointed destiny undeterred by wars or sirens or the Leviathan himself.

Nathan Chandler Foot

The echoes of Chandler Foot's accordion will long be heard in the Century. What warm evenings we had when he and Howard Craig played so tirelessly together! In the billiard room, too, his voice lingers still, making polylingual cracks and mots between his shots at cowboy pool! As a professional colleague—also a Centurion—said of him: "He was in many ways our most valuable member, a blithe spirit who liked to make people happy."

Another old friend and associate in medicine called him one of the most distinguished surgical pathologists in America. He was, too, an author of scientific papers and books, a teacher, and a research scientist. As a teacher he made a vivid impression upon thousands of students. "Few of these outstanding men, now mature surgeons," the Bulletin of the Cornell University Medical College tells us, "failed to respond to his geniality and enthusiasm, or to respect and learn from his careful clinical judgments, and many would say with gratitude that his guidance largely determined their outlook upon Medicine and life."

Nathan Chandler Foot was born in New York City, July 27, 1881. He received his A.B. from Harvard in 1903 and his doctorate of medicine from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, in 1907. Following his resident training at New York Hospital, he spent two years in Germany studying pathology. For three years, from 1912, he was on the staff of the Department of Pathology at Harvard. He then joined the faculty of the College of Medicine, University of Cincinnati, and became a professor there in 1928. When the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center was created, he assumed there the dual post of Professor of Pathology in Surgery and Head of the Laboratory of Surgical Pathology and continued in these capacities for sixteen years. In the last ten years of his life he was engaged in cancer research in the Papanicolan Cytology Laboratory of Cornell University Medical College.

He was a member of The American Association of Pathologists and Bacteriologists, the Harvey Society, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He was president of the American Board of Pathology, consultant to the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology in Washington, Fellow of the College of American Pathologists, and president of the New York Pathological Society.

With all his duties, he found time for outside things. He was, for example, a student of languages. He read extensively in French, German, and Italian literature and spoke fluently in Hungarian. He even knew something of Chinese. It amused him to post notices in seven languages in his laboratory.

He was an accomplished bird-watcher, familiar with the habits, the looks, and the singing of many birds. Cabinetmaking and metalworking were among his hobbies, and he was good at both. He also practiced water-color painting and exhibited regularly in the Amateur Show at the Century. He gave much time to his small grandson whose mother died when the boy was still a baby so that Chandler and his wife had much to do with bringing up the child. With the tools he had learned to use so adroitly, he made toys for the boy, including a miniature railway station with ticket offices and a practical elevator to go with an electric train.

Chandler Foot was a man of many gifts and generous with them all.—RB

William Dewey Foster

William D. Foster graduated from M.I.T. in 1912, and was cited for achieving the best four-year average in all subjects at the Institute. He practiced architecture in New York with various well-known firms and founded his own firm, Foster and Vassar, in 1921; but in 1934 he moved to Washington, and became a consulting architect for the Public Buildings Administration. He liked living and working in Washington; and, besides architecture, he became involved in all sorts of collateral matters that were going on there: the Fine Arts Commission, the District Board of Appeals and Review, and the American Institute of Architects. He was himself the architect of the new State Department Building, the Weather Bureau Building, and, most important perhaps of all, he was in charge of the restoration of Octagon House, the home of the Institute.

Bill cared very much about the Octagon. It was built in 1799 for Colonel John Tayloe, and is probably second only to the White House as a beautiful example of a Colonial dwelling house. After Bill died, the architects held a memorial service for him there, and nothing would have pleased him more.

Bill was a bachelor, and he had the time and energy to feel strongly about things of public moment and try to get them done right. He was generous, imaginative, and inflammable, and his crusades were punctuated with hilarity and crises. He was exceedingly affronted by the plans to alter and extend the East Front of the Capitol, and spoke bitterly against the proposals.

It is significant that despite the impulsive and sometimes reckless statements of his views he was held in great affection by all who came to know him. He was a stimulating and delightful companion—admired, respected, and loved.

Rowland Godfrey Freeman, Jr.

Rowland Freeman prepared at Westminster School (Simsbury) and graduated from Yale in 1916. He took the M.D. degree at Columbia P. & S. in 1921, and interned at Presbyterian Hospital.

He was a doctor, and lived the first part of his life in the City; but he moved to Greenwich in 1934, and shortly after to Boston, where he became interested in psychiatry, though his original specialty had been pediatrics. He managed to combine these fields, so that he eventually became recognized as an authority on the adjustment of children and young adults to the pressures of that business-organization type of life in which so many of us become enmeshed. This really is a key problem of modern society, and worthy of first-class attention.

After he left New York, Freeman was very busy in Boston and seldom got back to the Century, so that he rather dropped out of our sight. But that is due to our insularity, for he was lecturing at the Harvard Medical School and the Business School and producing monographs on his subject, and never lacked for an audience in that part of the world.

He was a natural teacher, and was wont to provoke thought by developing a spectacular or bizarre proposition. This technique he carried over into ordinary conversation, so that he was an amusing talker. He was an observer of and an acute commentator on the strange vagaries of human behavior, and they seemed to arrest his attention almost automatically. He was always seeking to push forward the frontiers of understanding and insight; and although his virtues and abilities are not by any means unsung, perhaps they were not appreciated at their real worth.

Abram Garfield

This son of an American president whose death was a nation's tragedy has been called the dean of Cleveland architects. But he was more than an architect of buildings. His long, active work in the Cleveland City Plan Commission showed him to be also a designer of civic growth.

The last of seven children of James A. Garfield, Abram was born in Washington on November 21, 1872. When he was nine, he lived for a few months in the White House, just before his father's assassination.

Abram Garfield graduated from Williams College in 1893 and from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in '96. He continued his study of architecture in Europe and began practice in Cleveland as partner of Frank B. Meade. In 1905, he opened an office under his own name. Later he was head of the firm of Garfield, Harris, Robinson, and Schafer.

In his early years, much of Garfield's work was residential. In Cleveland, he designed the houses of Mrs. John Hay, Dudley Blossom, Alva Chisholm, and Henry Dalton. The buildings of his design are the Babies' and Children's Hospital, MacDonald House, the Institute of Pathology of the University Hospitals, and several housing developments in and near Cleveland; and, in Pittsburgh, the National Union Fire Insurance Building.

In 1909, he was appointed by President Theodore Roosevelt to a National Council of Fine Arts, and in 1925 Coolidge appointed him to the National Fine Arts Commission for the usual four-year term, after which he was continued for one more year at President Hoover's request.

Beginning in 1928, he served for twelve years as head of the Cleveland City Plan Commission and was a prime mover in forming the Cleveland Regional Association, of which he became president. For fifteen years he headed the school of architecture which eventually was attached to Western Reserve University.

He was a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects and a member of the National Academy of Design and the Northern Ohio Branch of the English-Speaking Union. From Western Reserve University he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Humanities.

A fellow architect and fellow Centurion said of "Abe" Garfield:

"He was one of the sweetest and most understanding men whom I have ever known and I loved him dearly. No one who has died recently has left so blank a spot in my heart as he."—RB

William Gehron

William Gehron graduated from Carnegie Institute of Technology in 1912. He was an architect, and associated himself in the practice of the profession with Arnold W.

Brunner in New York. After some ten years he branched out for himself and eventually became extremely successful as the designer of public buildings, courthouses, schools, and libraries. He was a proponent of craftsmanship and tried to integrate all forms of art into his architectural designs. Largely because of the simplicity outstanding in his structures, he was able to erect them within the limited budget allotted by government agencies.

Perhaps his best known buildings are at West Point and Harrisburg. The Pennsylvania State Capitol Group, including the Soldiers and Sailors Memorial Bridge, is particularly highly regarded, and so are the buildings surrounding the Denison University campus at Granville, Ohio. He always seemed to do better than the experts thought he would; but afterwards they were generous with praise. His secret was, perhaps, that his conceptions were in the best classical tradition and very simple so that the concrete result was wonderfully pleasing.

Bill was most remarkably agreeable, and got along well with all kinds of people—particularly sculptors and artists who worked on buildings with him. He was a good artist himself, and produced excellent water colors. He had a feel for symmetry and the coordinate relation of parts, and he could synthesize the components (of pictures or buildings) into a graceful whole. We are all fortunate that the designing of so many public hospitals, libraries, and schoolhouses was in his hands.

Wolcott Gibbs

Wolcott Gibbs graduated from The Hill School in 1920, and took up being a newspaper reporter. In 1927 he came to

The New Yorker as a copyreader, and after a year acquired the title of Associate Editor. He wrote editorials from time to time, but his principal contribution to the magazine soon became and remained the reviewing of plays. He also wrote essays, and stories, and probably the best parodies since Aristophanes.

Gibbs worked rapidly and with intensity. His drama criticisms were merciless—like a vivisectionist exploring the functioning of an organism—but they were provoking and very lively. He wrote a play himself, at one time, and it had a run of 284 performances on Broadway.

He wrote in the informal and relaxed manner of a literary-man-about-town. He never wrote a sloppy sentence in his life, and he insisted that assemblages of words between periods include a subject and a predicate. When he reviewed pieces afflicted with mannerisms or affectations, he simply and systematically destroyed them; and when he wrote profiles of the great, and the near-great, the stature of the subject shrank unbelievably in the process.

The fact is Wolcott Gibbs was young, and impatient, and exceedingly clever. He was not a great writer, but he was a superb journalist and pamphleteer. He had a marvelously good time. He once wrote an amusing account of a time when he was a small boy, and assigned to play Puck in A Midsummer Night's Dream. The teacher told him to be "a little whirlwind," and he, being covered with bells and spangles, proceeded to break up the show. When he grew up, he was still the whirlwind; and whatever wasn't genuine, whatever was just show-off, whatever was precious and self-conscious was certain to be blown away in his blast. The folly, and the posturing, and the incompetence of those who presume to write were wellsprings of inspiration to him. In his parodies he could catch and exaggerate not only the verbal mannerisms but also the basic ideas of his victims. He did a profile of Henry Luce, written in Time-ese, that should have finished Time-ese off forever—but (alas) didn't.

What should one say about this man? That he devoted his talents to showing up the over-intense, the consciously good, the patronizingly superior, and all that ruck of objectionable elect who are going to be saved, and there is nothing much the rest of us can do about it. Like Cromwell, he would say:

"I beseech you, in the bowels of Christ, think it possible you may be mistaken."

Charles Kendall Gilbert

Elected in 1947 to succeed Bishop William T. Manning as head of the New York Diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Charles Kendall Gilbert had served for forty-two years in the diocese. He lived and worked always in the State of New York. He was born in Bainbridge, Chenango County, in 1878, took his A.B. and A.M. degrees at Hamilton College in Clinton and graduated from the General Theological Seminary in New York City. He became rector of Grace Church in Millbrook, N.Y., and later of the Church of St. James the Less in Scarsdale. For five years from 1913, he was editor of The Churchman. He was elected Suffragan Bishop in 1930.

His interests and influence were never confined within the church. He was deeply concerned with world problems. His thought for the persecuted and underprivileged occupied his mind far more than the procedural matters that too frequently compel a clergyman's attention. He was active in the Social Service Commission of the diocese. He supported reforms in labor legislation. He took a strong stand against alien registration and deportation bills which he thought unjust or illiberal. He was a critical observer of international affairs. He was an urgent advocate of United States participation in a world court. He signed, with thirteen other clergymen, an appeal to President Eisenhower to "stop the current drift toward atomic war" and a challenge to the policy of defending the islands of Quemoy and Matsu in order to protect Chiang Kai-shek from "losing face." Later he signed another protest against the "reckless policies" of Secretary Dulles.

Bishop Gilbert was a devoted Centurion. He always had a good time when he came to the Club. He was rather shy though and liked to be sure that one of his old friends would be there. One thing that worried him (as it worries most of us) was his forgetting of names. But he was comforted when a member jocosely said to him that he needn't be embarrassed about this as no one could remember his (the famous Bishop's) name either! It was characteristic of Gilbert's humility that he really believed this!

A fellow member—also a member of the clergy—recalls that "one of the confusing things about the Bishop was that he would occasionally drop into the Club to do some reading, get himself ensconced in some dark corner, prop a book up in front of him, and then promptly go to sleep, only to wake with an absolutely plausible knowledge of the contents of the book! I have never been able to account for this, but, whatever the reason, I feel that it was distinctly unfair to the lower orders of the clergy."

At a particular service each year, he made a point of remembering Daniel and the other employees of the Century.

Bishop Gilbert lived a long, full, and fruitful life. His Church and his Club will long remember him.—RB

Philip Lippincott Goodwin

Phil Goodwin prepared at Groton and graduated from Yale in 1907. Then he studied architecture at Columbia for three years, and later in Paris. From 1914 to 1916 he was a draftsman for Delano and Aldrich, and thereafter he practised architecture in the City with his own firm. Perhaps his principal monument in New York is the Museum of Modern Art on Fifty-third Street, which was opened in 1939; but he built some lovely houses on Long Island and in Florida, and here and there, for people with the money and taste to be free from the limitations of functional economy.

At this kind of specialty Phil was particularly felicitous. He was endowed by nature with good taste himself, and he stubbornly resisted being hurried into second-rate design or inferior execution. His houses have a "class" that is pleasurably exciting—like the old manor houses in France. Indeed, Phil was full of art, and he himself wrote a book on the smaller chateaux of Touraine.

For many years he was a trustee of the Museum of Modern Art, and sometime vice-chairman of the board. The evening before he left for Arizona (where he died five weeks later) the trustees gave him a dinner in the Museum's Penthouse—not because he was important, but because they all regarded him with affection. He had given the Museum many works of art, but principally he gave of himself.

He had manners, he had style, he was shrewd and full of knowledge, he was a scholar as well as a practising architect. Both he and his works had an aristocratic quality that shone like a good deed in a naughty world.

Farnham Pond Griffiths

Farnham Griffiths was born in California, the son of a minister. He spent all his working life in San Francisco and became one of the leading citizens of that great city, emerging eventually as chairman of the University of California Board of Regents and the foremost admiralty lawyer at the Bar.

Farnham had three great interests outside of his family. He loved the University of California, where he found great teachers such as Benjamin Ide Wheeler and Henry Morse Stephens, who became his friends, and where he found the good fellowship of students who chose him as one of their leaders. He loved the law in which he was trained, loved it as a scholar, as well as a successful practitioner. He loved the life of stimulating companionship and good conversation, which he found in greatest measure at the Century in New York and the Bohemian Club in San Francisco.

He was President of the Bohemian Club for a while. John L. Simpson relates that one day at the Bohemian Grove, Farnham suggested that the two of them devote the entire day to the most trifling accomplishment that could be thought up. They decided that this would be to acquire a 15-cent ice pick to add to their bar equipment. This involved a trip to Monte Rio, a little town a mile away. So they set out in the morning and visited many friends, strolled to Monte Rio, inspected the town thoroughly, bought the pick, had lunch somewhere, consumed many libations, visited more friends, discussed trivialities, and finally arrived back at their camp. Farnham considered this a huge success and felt that if they would only have taken proper note of it they might become better men.

Well, he was a pleasant and amusing person who had no need to withdraw into solitude to contemplate life. His contributions to the University of California over many years were wise and exceedingly useful, and he was as free of pedantry as an Elizabethan poet.

Arthur Loomis Harmon

"The contemporary manner" said Arthur Harmon in 1955, speaking of modern architecture, "has some way to go. When ornament again comes into use it will be a sign perhaps that 'contemporary' does not signify contempt for, after which we may make some progress." When the epidemic of building started in New York just after the end of the Second World War, he made a wise suggestion which unhappily has been little heeded. "What this city needs in particular," he said, "is more open areas, more sky and less architecture." Those remarks are evidence that Harmon, besides being a distinguished architect, was a wise critic of architectural design and understood urban integrity. According to a professional colleague, he was somewhat outmoded in the last twenty years by the great changes in taste, to which he was unsympathetic. But "Thank God for that" adds this Centurion friend.

A native of Chicago, Harmon studied at the Art Institute there, then graduated from the Columbia University School of Architecture in 1901. For the next ten years he was a designer in that firm which has given to the Century so many of its most honored members, McKim, Mead, and White. He later became a partner in the firm of Shreve, Lamb, and Harmon. Here he collaborated in the plans for the Empire State Building and was the architect of the Shelton Hotel in New York, for which he was awarded medals by the Architectural League of New York and the American Institute of Architects. Battle monuments in Tours, Cantigny, and Somme-py took him to France, and he designed the headquarters of the Y.M.C.A. in Jerusalem. Some of his other buildings in New York were the Juilliard School of Music, the New York Times Forty-fourth Street addition, and the Seaman's Y.M.C.A.

Harmon was President of the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects and of the Architectural League of New York, serving two terms in both.

The qualities his friends remember best in Arthur Harmon were his personal integrity, the modesty which made possible a critical appraisal of his own work, and a sense of humor which tempered his view of professional problems and helped make him a good companion.—RB

George Leslie Harrison

George Harrison graduated from Yale in 1910 and from the Harvard Law School in 1913. He was an outstanding scholar at Law School, and on graduation was appointed clerk to Justice Holmes, where he served a year, like all the rest of Holmes's secretaries. In 1914 he became assistant general counsel to the Federal Reserve Board in Washington, and later became general counsel. Except for these jobs he did not practise law, though he was eventually admitted to the Bar both in Washington and in New York.

In 1920 he became deputy governor of the Federal Reserve Bank in New York, and its president in 1936. In 1941 he was made president of New York Life Insurance Company, and in 1948 chairman of the board. He was exceedingly interested in problems of fiscal and monetary policies, and the national and international money reconstruction that went on between the wars furnished him with a field of almost infinite scope. George worked hard to bring order and coherence to situations not well understood by conventional economists, and responsible people with vision were thankful beyond telling to have him around and laboring in this vineyard. The progress of his march to positions of first importance is a measure of his competence and of the regard in which he was held.

He had a capacity to inspire confidence that made men want to have him involved in what they were most interested in. He was for many years a trustee of Columbia; and in 1952 he was one of the famous committee of five handpicked graduates of Yale who investigated the public charges that the students there were being indoctrinated with Communism and atheism. The influence of the committee depended, of course, on the standing of the members in the community, and the public acceptance of the report was a tribute to the personal integrity of the five.

George was lame, and had been since he was a child. As he grew older and heavier, this must have bothered him more and more; but he never complained, never spoke of it. He was always cheerful and always well informed. It took him very little time to understand a very complicated matter; and he would rephrase a bumbling exposition so that it came to look simple even to the poor fellow originally trying to explain it.

But it wasn't because George had a first-class head that he went so far so fast. It was because he was an understanding and enlightened person. He was fully aware, not only of the possibilities of things, but of the limits of human capacity. Counsels of perfection are no use to men struggling with the great tides of prejudice and self-interest that sweep around the world. One constructive move is worth all the homilies in existence. And George spent no time moralizing. Where there was a fire, there he went with the hook-and-ladder and began taking people out of windows.

Alas, we have lost a great architect of finance and a devoted public servant.

John Held, Jr.

John's pictures reflect an entire era. It was the sort of era that pleases historians because its framework in time was so neat, its beginning and end so plainly marked that professors can draw a diagram of it on the blackboard. It ran its course almost precisely parallel with national prohibition. In it, the American lunatic fringe was at its deepest. In it, flagpole sitting, marathon dancing, flask toting, the sugar daddy and the flapper crowded out saner diversions. In it, the United States withdrew from the rest of the world and lapsed back almost to frontier days—quite literally so, with the new frontiers staked out in the wilderness between the railroads by model T. It was not a happy era and John knew it. Half of the charm of his exaggerated drawings was in their irony. It is doubtful if any document or artifact we have so sharply points the mad temper of the time.

John was born in Salt Lake City on January 10, 1889, and began life as a Mormon. At twenty-one he came to New York with four dollars in his pocket and got a job in a newspaper art department. In the First World War, he served in the Navy. After the war he began to draw his caricatures—thin, flat-chested angular girls with rolled stockings and shingle bobs and young men with coonskin coats and flasks, and suddenly found himself spearheading a vogue that swept the country. His drawings were so valued that admirers sent him blank checks with their requests for an original. In the fiction of the twenties, F. Scott Fitzgerald was his counterpart and together they became fabulously popular. Some of Held's best drawings appeared in Fitzgerald's Tales of the Jazz Age. In the 1930's Held tried fiction too with Grim Youth, Saga of Frankie and Johnny, Women Are Necessary, and A Bowl of Cherries. In the Second World War, he was with the Army Signal Corps in Belmar, New Jersey, where he afterward bought a farm and lived. There he worked in sculpture and displayed a fine talent in the portrayal of animals—especially horses.

He was a congenial companion of brilliant imagination, often quite serious in his talk and at times profound in philosophical understanding. As with many humorists, a shadow of sadness touched him—something that was perceptible in his gayest creations. Sometimes he would appear shrouded with gloom, would tell you how obviously the world was on the chutes, but then, if you agreed with him, he would abruptly reverse himself and become a champion of silver linings. His appearance was striking. Tall and handsome he wore colorful clothes. He was generously tattooed. His favorite recreation was raising saddle horses.

It was a source of regret to the Centurions who knew him that he came so rarely to the Club, especially in his later years. But he did, occasionally, use his talents for our enjoyment. In 1938, he designed the announcements for the Fathers and Sons Dinner at the Club, and in 1941 he was a prime mover in the gay celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the clubhouse, when a street of the gay nineties with shooting galleries, patent medicine booths, and honky-tonks was built in the Library.

There are many things we should like to forget about the era of the 1920's but John Held, Jr., is most certainly not one of them.—RB

Thomas Steele Holden

Although his work was mainly in the publication of construction news and as a building expert, Tom Holden began life as an architect and was always held in high esteem by the American Institute of Architects. He attended every convention of the Institute and is warmly remembered by many Institute members for his receptions at the conventions, at which he lavishly entertained. An invitation to "Tom Holden's Party" was eagerly accepted and highly prized.

Born in Dallas, Texas, in 1886, he received his A.B. degree at the University of Texas in 1907 and his master's degree in mathematics in 1911. He took his B.S. degree in architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1916. From 1916 to 1918, he practised architecture in Boston and in Akron, Ohio. The following years he joined the F. W. Dodge Corporation as its chief statistician. Meanwhile, he had served in the First World War as First Lieutenant of Engineers in the Engineering Division of the Army's Ordnance Department.

In 1941, he was elected president of the Dodge Company and served until 1953, when he was made vice-chairman of the Board. He was also a vice-president and trustee of the John B. Pierce Foundation and an honorary member of the Architectural League of New York.

In the Century he was often present at Monthly Meetings and, at other times, he also exercised his special talent as a charming host at dinners to his colleagues in the Club's private dining rooms.—RB

Tracy Hoppin

Tracy Hoppin was brought up in Providence and graduated from Harvard in 1893. As an undergraduate he was the college tennis champion, and he played a first-class game until late in life.

He started at the Harvard Law School; but he did not like it, and after a year he left and went abroad to attend to some family business. He was then taken very ill, and, being incapacitated for a long time, he began during his convalescence to cultivate an interest and talent for painting. On his full recovery he studied with great intensity, first at the Artists League in New York and then at the Beaux-Arts.

He did some portraits, but his main interest was landscapes. His work was in the tradition of the French impressionist school, after the manner of Monet and Manet, and his interpretations emphasized outdoor color and light. There is a sort of reserved delicacy about his paintings that is very pleasant.

What he was is perhaps more important than any particular thing that he did. He traveled all over the world, and acquired a knowledge of curious and interesting things that go on, so that his mind was enlarged and his understanding of men and their doings was broad and tolerant. He was exceedingly kind, especially to other painters, and gave generously of his time and effort to get them started. His influence on those about him was profound and lasting, and this is probably the really big contribution he made to the world, for he created an atmosphere where friendliness flourished and the world seemed good; and when men were with him they were refreshed and encouraged.

He was a member of the Century for forty-five years.

Frederic Brainerd Kellogg

Fred Kellogg prepared at Groton, and graduated from Princeton in 1932, where he played on the football team and joined the Ivy Club. Then he studied for a year at Cambridge (England) and—at the suggestion of his father—a subsequent year at the Harvard Law School. He really wanted to be a minister rather than a lawyer, however, so he entered the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge (Massachusetts) and in 1937 duly completed the course.

From that time he was a priest of the Episcopal Church and worked in Cambridge. He became Chaplain to the Students, with his headquarters at Christ Church in Harvard Square, and by 1940 the work was so well organized and effective that chaplains from other colleges all over the country came to observe how it was done. In that year the Bishop Rhinelander Foundation for College Work was set up; and Fred continued as Chaplain under the Foundation, and gave his full time to the post. He not only ministered to the students, but he personally raised some $15,000 each year to help pay the expenses of the enterprise.

Cambridge is full of "liberals," logical positivists, existentialists, and such like, who are usually very articulate and clever and congenitally allergic to clergymen. But all this diverse company got along excellently with Fred. They liked him, and saw that he was obviously honest and on the side of the angels, and he had their respect and good wishes.

And he needed good will, for his nerves were uncertain, and he had fits of depression and discouragement. He wanted to teach; and he gave a course at the Theological Seminary, but he found it was more than he could undertake. He was constantly in touch with maladjusted young people—some of them very much out of kilter—and this is trying work even for well-poised natures; for one neurotically inclined it was over-severe. Probably Fred ought to have stopped being Chaplain and done something with his hands, like cabinet-making; but he could not bring himself to give up what he thought of as a moral commitment of great importance. And so he resolutely kept on—until the world finally proved too much for him and did him in.

Professor Raphael Demos wrote of him to a friend: "He was our minister; and I shall remember him always for his sermons: without any unction, completely sincere, without emotionalism, yet vital, always with a point that he made in a compact, forceful way. He was a true spiritual guide, a fine Christian person whom we shall always remember, and always miss."

Charles Francis Kettering

The lone-wolf inventor who once ranked with generals in American hero-worship has largely disappeared from our scene. Inventions today are anonymous. They emerge from industrial laboratories where teams of nameless researchers have been at work and are credited to G.M., G.E., Dupont, or some other great corporation. Perhaps "Boss Ket," as the devoted men who worked with him used to call Charles Kettering, was the last of the noble breed. He was never submerged in an organization, and the personal fame he deserved came to him abundantly in his lifetime.

He was born near Loudonville, Ohio, in 1876 and grew up as a barefoot boy on a farm. "I was a hillbilly," he remembered. "I had to drive the cows through the frosty grass and stand in a warm spot where a cow had lain to warm my feet." He was educated first in a country district school and then, after working as a schoolteacher and later as a telephone lineman, he took an engineering degree at Ohio State University. His first job was with the National Cash Register Company at Dayton. Here he developed the first electric cash register. After five years, he established, with Edward A. Deeds, The Dayton Engineering Laboratories Company —later called "Delco."

Using the electrical engineering experience he had gained with the cash register, he worked at Delco on a self-starter for automobiles. There had been some experimenting by others in this direction, but Kettering is credited with designing the first practical starting mechanism, acting on the theory that a small motor would yield great power if the load was only momentary. He was encouraged in this work by Henry Leland, general manager of the Cadillac Company, one of whose friends had died of injuries suffered while cranking a car.

Kettering acquired in a long life of constant work some 140 patents. These included electric ignition, winter oils, four-wheel brakes, quick-drying lacquer paint sprays, two-way shock absorbers, fixed focus headlights, double safety glass windows, and variable speed transmissions. It is probable that he did more to make the automobile what it is today than any other individual. And as far as basic technological achievement goes, even the most high-powered automotive research and development laboratories have not done as much as this "benchworker," as he called himself.

Yet, although Kettering kept repeating that he was a "pliers and screwdriver man, not a theory man," he established a foundation at Antioch College for the study of "why grass is green" and became much interested in such basic research as the investigation of the structure of the chlorophyll molecule. He also sponsored the Fever Therapy Research Project at the Miami Valley Hospital in Dayton. Here he invented the Kettering Hypotherm which has been useful in the treatment of fever.

In 1920, Delco was absorbed by General Motors. In the course of nearly thirty years, Kettering became indispensable to this huge organization and, after his retirement in 1947, he acted as consultant and continued on the board.

Dr. Kettering received degrees from more than thirty educational institutions. He was trustee of four colleges and universities. For some twenty years, he was Chairman of the National Inventors Council.

He has been described as "lanky, long faced, bony and stooping and incessantly inquisitive." He talked in epigrams and parables. By some commonplace analogy he was able to simplify many a complex technological process so that a layman could understand it.

Unfortunately for us, he was hardly ever at the Century and we had to be content with the stories that were told about him by his many Centurion admirers.—RB

William Howard Kirkbride

Born in Philadelphia of an old Pennsylvania family in 1879, William Kirkbride was a direct descendant of Joseph Kirkbride, who came to America in 1682. He was graduated from Haverford College in the Class of 1901. After a varied career as writer, magazine publisher, and cotton grower, he settled in Litchfield, Connecticut. During his years there he was often at the Century, where he was the center of a group of card players. He attracted attention by his high, stiff collar, which he wore long after the rest of us had succumbed to soft collar-attached shirts.

When the Second World War broke out, Kirkbride moved with his family to California. In Santa Barbara, where he spent the rest of his life, he engaged in many community activities. He was vice-president of the Council of Social Agencies and secretary-treasurer of the British War Relief Society. He was awarded the King's Medal for service in the cause of freedom, and the medal was presented to him by Lord Inverchapel, Ambassador from Great Britain to the United States. He was greatly interested also in the local boys club and was awarded the Boys Club of America bronze citation for his work.—RB

William Witherle Lawrence

In his review of Shakespeare's Problem Plays, a New York Times critic wrote that "the sanity of Professor Lawrence's cool scholarship is refreshment to the soul." Scholar he was, first and always, penetrating deep into medieval literature as well as the plays of Shakespeare, and "cool" in the sense that he never let his enthusiasms carry him into the realm of conjecture or into praise to the detriment of appraisal. His aim above everything—like the aim of every true artist—was clarity. He had as great a horror of vagueness and obscurity as he had of error.

"In the precision of his mind," wrote one close friend, "and in the granite of his character, William Witherle Lawrence was a true son of his native state of Maine." Born in Bangor, May 29, 1876, he spent the first twenty-two years of his life in Maine, graduating from Bowdoin in 1898. When he left college, he was uncertain whether his future career would lie in the direction of painting or scholarship. He seemed to have a flair for both; he was gifted, too, in music. But he decided on the study and teaching of language and literature and spent a year in Germany—then thought to be the ideal center of learning for Anglo-Saxon youth. For three years he taught German at Harvard and, in 1903, accepted a professorship in English at the University of Kansas. He then went to Columbia and stayed there for thirty years until, in 1936, he retired.

His writings in this period included The Haunted Mare in Beowulf, Medieval Story, Beowulf and the Epic Tradition, Chaucer and Canterbury Tales, and shortly before his retirement, Shakespeare's Problem Plays.

After his retirement, he was an active trustee of Bowdoin College. He was long a trustee of the American Scandinavian Foundation and was awarded the Swedish Royal Order of Vasa, First Class. He was a charter member of the Medieval Academy of America.

For many years, he was one of a group organized by Professor William T. Brewster which sat for Tuesday lunch in the southwest corner of the Century's dining room. In the group were Roberts Walker, Gerard Fountain, Charles Hazen, and others; it was often enlivened by the explosive erudition of Leonard Bacon.

It is sad to have these scholars of the old school go. Too few of them are left in a world which so needs their serenity and sense of order.—RB

Edwin Carlyle Lobenstine

Edwin Lobenstine prepared at Exeter and graduated from Yale in 1895 (Phi Beta Kappa). He wanted to be a Presbyterian missionary; and he studied for two years at Union Theological Seminary and one year at Auburn, graduating from the latter in 1898. The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions then sent him to Nanking to learn the language; and thereafter he served in China for thirty-seven years. He worked long and hard at this. He opened a school and hospital in Anhwei Province, and was there all through the Great Famine of 1909. For his services as director of famine relief work he was awarded a medal by the governor of the province; and later he received from Chiang Kai-shek the Rosette of the Order of the Brilliant Star for his work on the board of the American Bureau for Medical Aid to China.

He came home to the United States in 1935; and the following year Yale gave him an honorary D.D. In New York he worked with the Rockefeller Foundation on problems of China, and was trustee of Yale-in-China even to the time of his death. He was a vessel wholly consecrated to the service of China and the Chinese. He liked them and apparently understood them, and they, in turn, had confidence in him. How much of his work will survive the present Communist regime, no one can tell; but for two generations of Chinese he was a star of hope and a beacon of integrity.

Thatcher Thomas Payne Luquer

Thatcher Luquer was born in Bedford, where his father was Rector of St. Matthews Church for more than 50 years, and he lived there all his life. He went to Trinity School, at Tivoli, and graduated from Columbia (C.E.) in 1889, and was first employed in the engineering department of the New York Telephone Co. In 1900 he opened his own office in the City, and, in the course of time, was connected with numerous dam and construction projects in the northeast.

In the First World War he served overseas as Colonel of the 306th Engineers, and was decorated with the medal Des Soldates de Verdun. He was always interested in military affairs, and prominent in various orders and associations of veterans and officers.

He was a bachelor, and he lived with his sister, Miss Eloise Luquer, who was three years his senior. She was, without question, the dominant figure in this brother-sister ménage; and when the good lady died about ten years ago the Colonel, at the age of 82, had his first taste of unsupervised freedom. He went on cruises to the West Indies, and the Spanish Main, and even to the coast of Africa—far better employments than living in a dreary, English-style country house in Bedford Hills, attended by three loyal but superannuated domestics.

As many members of the Club will recall, the Colonel was a distinguished-appearing, hawk-nosed, slightly bent, old gentleman, the obvious original of a cartoonist's dream of a retired British army officer. In late years he became very deaf; and this added to his formidableness, but in no way detracted from his fierce independence. He wouldn't let anyone help him on with his coat.

He never threw anything away; and his house was filled with letters, papers, and books—some interesting, some quite otherwise—mostly connected with military matters. He was a dry old man of few words, not given to philosophy or reminiscence, explosive sometimes but always polite, and a good rapid talker when he got going.

He died at 92, a picturesque link with the past.

Daniel Trembly MacDougal

Daniel T. MacDougal was born in Liberty, Indiana, and graduated from DePauw University in 1890 as a bachelor of science. In 1891 he took the M.S. degree at Purdue; and then he went to study botany at Tübingen and Leipzig and Amsterdam. From 1899 to 1905 he was director of New York Botanical Garden; and in 1956 that institution awarded him the only Certificate of Distinguished Service that it has ever issued.

MacDougal was probably the leading botanist of his time. He lived to be 93; and he was known and honored in all the capitals of Western Europe. He was a prolific author of treatises on the abstruse physiology of plants and trees; he knew about the mechanics of osmosis, and chlorophyll, and about the cycles in weather and tree growth, and about desert ecology; and he was recognized as the leading authority in these matters.

About 1910 he established himself at Carmel, California, and that was his headquarters the rest of his life. Until 1933 he worked as director of botanical research for the Carnegie Institution of Washington; and then he retired, at 68. But he kept right on working at Carmel and in the Arizona desert, writing monographs, conducting researches, and receiving honors and degrees and medals from all over Europe and America. He was affectionately known in California as the "Grand Old Man of the Monterey Peninsula," and he was a source of pride to the whole State. He was a spry, energetic man with a twinkling eye and a genial personality, and his keen intellect and wide interests were a stimulation to the old and an inspiration to the young.

John Fisher MacLane

John MacLane was brought up by his grandparents in Western Pennsylvania and graduated from Westminster College (New Wilmington, Pa.) in 1899. The same year he was admitted with advanced standing at Yale, where he graduated with an A.B. in 1900. All his MacLean ancestors since the dispersion of the MacLeans from the Isle of Mull in 1788 were Pennsylvanians by birth and residence. Immediately after graduating, he left New Haven, and went to St. Paul, where he had some friends. There he took his law course at the University of Minnesota, at the same time clerking in the law office of Ambrose Tighe. Pretty soon he got a job with the West Publishing Co., where he learned the mechanics of editorially compiling law books.

After three years of this he set out for the West and arrived at Boise, Idaho. The legislature passed an act, within a year, authorizing revision and codification of the laws of Idaho, and in all the State they could find no one except MacLane who knew anything whatever about making law books. So the Supreme Court of Idaho appointed him Code

Commissioner to do the job. This made him famous—in Idaho—and he became Assistant Attorney General, and in 1911 Judge of the District Court. From this he resigned, to be the law partner of Senator Borah; and almost immediately he came to New York to work on the organization of Electric Bond and Share. He became one of the most expert lawyers in the public utility field; but he lost his residence and position in Idaho. For some years he worked in Salt Lake City before he finally moved to New York.

In New York he was commonly supposed to be an indigenous product of the West—probably a Mormon Elder. This amused and slightly annoyed him, for he was always homesick for Western Pennsylvania. He went with Sam Fuller to Pittsburgh one day for a conference with the Kuhns. They arrived early on a hot July morning. Some time later, MacLane wrote: "Fuller looked out over the City, teeming with heat, smoke, blast furnaces, and malodorous effusions from the banks of the rivers, and said, 'This looks like Hell will look.' I did not reply; but I said to myself, 'Now I'm home!' "

He was wonderfully Scotch: tolerant, quizzical, conservative, with a mind like David Hume's, and a gift for simplifying abstruse and technical problems.

Frederick Palmer

Frederick Palmer graduated from Allegheny College in 1893—just in time to go to London and be a war correspondent reporting the Turkish-Greek War. After this he was a war correspondent whenever there was a war going on. He went to the Klondike for the gold rush and the Philippines for the war with Spain, and returned around the world with Admiral Dewey in 1899. In 1900 he accompanied the expedition for the relief of Peking, and there got to know Captain John J. Pershing, the future commander of the A.E.F. With the First Japanese Army in the field he reported the Russo-Japanese War, and this got him a high reputation. The other two accredited American correspondents reporting that war were Jack London and Richard Harding Davis. He attended the Philippine Insurrection, and the Chinese Boxer Rebellion, and was on hand at several Central American revolutions. At the age of 35 he was the Dean of American War Correspondents.

When the First World War came along, he was assigned to the British Army and Fleet, the only accredited American correspondent with them from 1914 to 1917. After the United States entered the war, General Pershing commissioned him Lieutenant-Colonel and stationed him at G.H.Q. in Chaumont, where his services as military censor and historian of the A.E.F. were invaluable.

As a war correspondent Palmer was scrupulously accurate and correct. The result was the Generals liked him and trusted him, and this advantaged him very much. He always played strictly according to the rules. After the war he wrote various books, including biographies of Pershing and of Secretary Baker.

He was an unromantic man, very much of the world. He had a resonant voice, and spoke slowly in a somewhat oratorical manner; but a kind of half smile indicated he was not taking himself too seriously. He was not optimistic about the salvation of the world, and considered the New Deal just so much drivel. Nevertheless, he was always cheerful and amusing and not in the least downcast at the prospects.

In truth, he was a very civilized person with a great store of wisdom and philosophy.

George Braxton Pegram

George B. Pegram graduated from Trinity College, North Carolina, in 1895—before the Deity was elbowed out of the name by Tobacco and it was called Duke University. He became one of the great physicists of our time, and seven universities bestowed honorary doctorates upon him. He studied under Max Planck, and at Cambridge (England) with Jeans and Edington, specializing in radioactivity.

In 1900 he joined the faculty at Columbia as assistant in physics, and in 1950 he retired as Vice-President Emeritus of the University. During this half century he gave direction to the development of the new physics; he conceived the atom bomb; he brought Fermi from Italy to Columbia in 1939 to demonstrate uranium fission, and Planck from Germany to explain the theory of quanta; he built the first atomic pile in the world; he measured the neutron, and transmuted one element into another; he worked out the harnessing of nuclear power for submarines.

Like Isaac Newton, he thought about physics all the time; but he also conducted courses at Columbia, and was Dean of the Graduate Faculties. He was a pioneer in the new age of nuclear physics, and he lived long enough to see the theories operating in applied science.

Pegram was a long, lean man with a pleasant, pensive face. He did not like administrative jobs very much; but he did them and did them extremely well, and Columbia was fortunate beyond telling to have so faithful a teacher. A university is a vast and complex enterprise, and it will foster teaching and research of the first quality only if it can command the services of administrators who have the unquestioned respect of their professional colleagues. The atomic age spread from the laboratories on Morningside Heights to all the corners of the earth, to the depths of the sea, and to outer space; and this was not due to any one man but to the collaboration of many men in many lands. Nevertheless, the deus ex machina that broke the bottlenecks and freed the minds of men, and kept the current flowing, was Pegram. If only the dispassionate approach of the great natural scientists could be engrafted in the hearts and minds of our governors, teachers, spiritual pastors, and masters, the prospects for the millennium would then indeed be bright.

Robert Kelly Prentice

When Robert Kelly Prentice was born, the Civil War was going on. He was elected to the Century in 1890, when he was 26 years old, and so he was a member for 68 years.

Kelly Prentice, as he was affectionately called, graduated from Princeton (after helping to found the Ivy Club) in 1884 and from the Columbia Law School two years later. He was admitted to the Bar the same year, and went into his father's law office. Later he was a partner in the firm of Prentice and Townsend, which was dissolved in 1945. He was a competent lawyer, much involved with railroad reorganizations and bond-holders committees. But he was also a public-spirited citizen and spent time and effort on good works. The chief of these was the Hospital for Special Surgery, of which he was a director for more than fifty years and Vice President since 1924. He was also Churchwarden and General Counsel to the Church of the Incarnation, a long-time member of Squadron A, serving on the staff of Governor Theodore Roosevelt, and a faithful worker on numerous committees of the Bar Associations.

He lived a long time, so that most of us now alive who knew him think of him as an Elder Statesman. He was of an arresting aspect, and when he began to talk his eyes seemed to start from his head and his hair to stand on end. He spoke in a high, nasal tone—not unpleasant, but very piercing—and what he had to say was couched in a salty brevity more persuasive than any measured periods of oratory. When he spoke at board meetings, his remarks were usually followed by a silence while the other members thought it out; for he was prone to raise searching and legal questions that had not occurred to anyone else, but which were always deserving of an answer.

All his life he was a colorful citizen of the Town, constructive and useful, witty and shrewd.

Henry Fowles Pringle

Henry Pringle was born in New York, but, like all good Pringles, he derived originally from Charleston and maintained ties with relatives there all his life. He graduated from Cornell in 1920 and went to work as a reporter, first on the Sun, and later on the World. In 1932 he taught journalism at Columbia, eventually becoming a full professor, and continued in this till 1942, when he went to the Division of Publications of the O.W.I. in Washington. Here he got involved in a very fine policy fight against the growing influence of the advertising fraternity, in the course of which thirteen writers resigned—including Henry.

He used to write a good deal for the New Yorker, but his real interest was biography. He thought Plutarch had the right idea; and when Henry died he was engaged on a joint biography of Wilson and Roosevelt. Biography, however, is not lucrative, and the preparation and research are interminable; so between biographies Henry kept solvent by contributing to the Saturday Evening Post, Harper's, Collier's, and various other periodicals. In 1931 he won the Pulitzer prize for his biography of Theodore Roosevelt.

Henry had admirable talents as a gadfly. He very much annoyed complacent businessmen, bureaucrats, and all the ruck of people in positions of power who come to arbitrary conclusions without the use of reason and then try to rationalize their decisions. When they denied him access to government files, or suppressed vital documents that were essential to a biographer, he dipped his pen in gall and fairly excoriated them.

It is essential that there be men like Henry around: men who scoff at the rules, and challenge the rulings. Otherwise we should become a huge General Motors Rotary or a vast Teamsters' Union—not perhaps with a Hitler or a Khrushchev to govern us, but afflicted with a horde of vice-presidents to keep telling us that what is good for them is good for us.

William Hutchinson Putnam

Bill Putnam was born in Connecticut, educated in the public schools of the State, and lived there all his life. He made a living by being an investment banker; and in 1905

he settled in Hartford and immediately began to take a lively interest in civic affairs. It was customary in those days for the Connecticut River, which cuts the State in two, to storm out of its banks every few years and do enormous damage. Bill was not reconciled to this. He became Chairman of the Connecticut Valley Flood Control Commission that built the dikes at Hartford; and he never ceased insisting that further measures be taken up and down the valley to tame the River and make it safe.

Bill used to get up early in the morning and drive around Hartford looking for things to improve. He was known to the citizens as "Mr. Hartford"; and for fifty years he had a hand in almost every public project in the city. He always referred to himself as "only a country boy," and insisted he didn't "know anything about politics," and having disarmed opposition by these pretenses, he would get his way again and again. "By always being for something," he said, "I just don't have time to join the opposition."

And this was quite true. He was always for something. He had the vision of a beautiful Hartford, a dream of five great bridges across the River, and he thought about these things in terms of a ten-league canvas, and slowly they came to pass.

In 1942 Trinity College gave him an honorary M.A. Although he had never gone to college himself, he was for long Chairman of the Trustees of Connecticut College for Women. He was a modern version of the ideal Renaissance man—always pressing on from one astonishing conception to another, and carrying along with him the timorous midgets of little faith.

Jackson Eli Reynolds

Jackson Reynolds graduated from Stanford in 1896, and from the Columbia Law School in 1899. He started his career as a teacher of law, spending two years at Stanford and eight at Columbia, and then he actively practised law, becoming involved in antitrust and interstate commerce matters and defending railroads against the attacks of the Government and minority stockholders.

In 1917 he became a director and vice-president of the First National Bank. This institution had a countinghouse, known as "Fort Sherman," at 2 Wall Street, and it had only 1,200 depositors—but they each kept minimum balances of $100,000, and some of them of many millions. It was a wholesale bank, and firmly managed by Mr. George F. Baker, who was born in 1840 and had been through every panic and depression since 1857. He complained that they changed the rules a little with each new one. Mr. Baker was interested in young men, and was training Frank Hine to succeed him as head of the bank; but Hine died of old age in 1927; so then Mr. Baker began to train Jackson Reynolds for the place.

Reynolds was president of the bank till 1937, when he retired, full of honors and years; but a month later Mr. Baker himself died at the age of 97, and Reynolds had to come back and be Chairman of the Board till 1939, when he succeeded in abolishing the office entirely and again retiring. He then sold his house in Beekman Place, one of the last of the imposing private houses built before the depression years, to Billy Rose and moved into a modest apartment on Park Avenue.

It must be said that whatever Jackson Reynolds put his hand to he did extremely well and seemed to have a good time doing it. It was impossible to disturb his aplomb. He had a dead-pan face that took good news and bad without change of expression, and he approached difficult problems without any sign of discomposure. His relations with Mr. Baker were necessarily very close over a long time, but he never complained of the old man to anyone. He seemed to regard him as a unique and valuable curio to be listed among the assets of the bank.

With all the turmoil of two wars and the 1929 debacle and its consequences, Reynolds found time to serve as a director of the Federal Reserve Bank, Chairman of the Clearing House, Trustee of Columbia, and in a host of other consecrated jobs—some of which (like renting the Columbia lease-hold for Rockefeller Center) consumed an untoward amount of time and effort. He was humorously detached about these things, and not in the least dedicated to good works. When he saw something that was important and had to be done, he went and did it—not rejoicing at this opportunity to serve his fellow-citizens, but complaining gently that Chance or an all-wise Providence had selected him. But he always did it.

When the Lord shall come and reckon with Jackson, he will say: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." And Reynolds, with less composure than usual, will murmur: "Please don't mention it."

William Walker Rockwell

William W. Rockwell graduated from Harvard in 1895, magna cum laude, and from the Andover Theological Seminary in 1900. He continued his religious education in Germany, taking degrees at Goettingen and Marburg. In 1905 he was ordained a minister of the Congregational Church, and was appointed Assistant Professor of Church History at Union Theological Seminary in New York. In 1925 he was named Librarian with the rank of professor, a post he held until his retirement.

Rockwell was a learned man with energy and vision. When he became Librarian at Union Seminary, the books were securely locked in packed shelves in the basement, to which only the faculty had keys. After looking at a dozen modern libraries, Rockwell insisted on unlocking the shelves and putting the books where they would be accessible to faculty and students alike. And, of course, he got the library properly catalogued, so that it is now the greatest ecclesiastical library in the land.

It is usual, among cynics, to rejoice that the Turks burnt the great Alexandrian Library—a task that took about ten years—because it seems that the vast majority of the works there were theological discussions about such problems as "the same substance vs. a similar substance," and it was well to rid the world of them. Whether these controversies interested Rockwell or not, he spent very little time on them, but devoted himself to acquiring a magnificent collection of books—particularly reference tools that are essential to the publications of the Seminary faculty.

He had an extraordinary range of learning, and his years of study in Germany had made him familiar with the riches of Continental scholarship. His standards were high, and he exacted a rigorous performance from his students; but he was constantly eager to share his knowledge, and he had a warmth that endeared him to students and faculty colleagues alike.

Homer Schiff Saint-Gaudens

The son of a famous father whose portraits in sculpture have become landmarks in New York and elsewhere, Homer Saint-Gaudens grew up in the circle of the arts. It was natural for him to become a critic but here he reached beyond the fine arts into literature and the theatre. And when crises came to his country, he turned his native talents to its service.

He was born in Roxbury, Massachusetts, on September 28, 1880. He prepared for college at a sequence of schools in Lawrenceville, Paris, Dresden, and New York—evidence of the peregrinations into which his father's work took him. He entered Harvard at nineteen. There he may have achieved much in many directions, but a friendly antagonist of the same class at Yale remembers him chiefly as captain of the fencing team and a superb fencer. "A gift," this contemporary suggests "from some Gascon ancestor, no doubt."

In his boyhood and youth, he spent his leisure time in his father's studio, following the phases of the sculptor's creation. Here and at family dinners he met the best American artists of the time: such men as John La Farge, John Singer Sargent, Edwin Abbey, John Alexander, Frank Millet, Stanford White, Charles McKim, and Daniel Burnham. Is it surprising that, growing in such an ambience, he was never quite able to break out of the magic circle?

He started in as a newspaper reporter on Charles Dana's New York Sun but soon he was doing criticism over a large field. Then, with the illness and death of his father, he gave up everything for the moment to complete The Reminiscences of Augustus Saint-Gaudens, a book which still stands on the top shelf of American art biography.

Meanwhile, he had come to love the theatre. This fascination had begun for him in his school days in Paris. Now as a New York critic, he was one of the first to see the great potential of Barrie's Peter Pan, and his understanding comments on this brought him an offer from Charles Frohman. Soon he was stage director for Maude Adams. He directed The Little Minister, What Every Woman Knows, and A Kiss for Cinderella. Later he directed the production of Brieux's The Red Robe, of which Lionel Barrymore was the star, and Eugene O'Neill's Beyond the Horizon. His greatest work in the theatre, however, was in the field of lighting, in which he eliminated much that had been haphazard and replaced it with true scientific method.

In 1918, as an officer of the 40th Engineers, he organized the first American camouflage force. In France, he had charge of all the camouflage work of the Second Army. When the war was over, he became a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Engineers Reserve Corps. Between the wars, he spent some time nearly every year in an army camp, developing new camouflage techniques and in the Second World War, he became Chief of the Camouflage Section, European Theatre of Operations. He was awarded the Legion of Merit Medal for his work in "the entire European Combat Area." Before D-Day in 1944, Colonel Saint-Gaudens was in charge of hiding the American armies as they gathered for invasion assembly.

In 1922, Saint-Gaudens was made Director of Fine Arts at the Carnegie Institute. He organized seventeen series of annual international exhibitions of oil paintings, spending time each year visiting the studios of American and European artists in search of the best canvases. In 1941, his book The American Artist and his Times was published.—RB

John Knox Shear

John K. Shear graduated from Carnegie Institute of Technology in 1938, and in 1941 took a graduate degree in architecture at Princeton. At the age of 32 he was appointed head of the Department of Architecture at Carnegie, a position that left him opportunity to practise as an architect in Pittsburgh.

During the Second World War he served in the Navy for four years; and then he returned to Carnegie as an associate professor. After a short but brilliant career in education, he left Pittsburgh and his architectural practice, and moved to Princeton to become editor of the Architectural Record. He was occupied in that when he died, being only forty years old.

John brought to architecture not only fine creative gifts but a philosophical approach, regarding it as an expression of man's nature and aspirations. This was why he was willing to give up active practice to edit the Record. He was always wanting to know why something was good, and something else was bad. He searched for the best, and for the reason why it was best.

In the great professions somebody has to be urgently doing this all the time—somebody with vision, and competence, and unflagging interest; and with all these John was endowed. He had a quick understanding of practical problems, and was infinitely satisfactory to talk with. Unfortunately, he was taken just as his influence commenced to be felt.

Apart from his talents, he was a very engaging person: a Scotch Presbyterian type (an Elder of the Church at Princeton), a solid, decent, Christian gentleman.

William Leo Smith

Bill Smith was born in Concord, near where the rude bridge arched the flood, and he was educated in Boston. He took special courses in architecture at M.I.T. in 1910–11 and won the first Rotch scholarship. In 1912–14 he studied architecture at Rome, but got home in time to go to the first Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg.

He was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Coast Artillery (as the corps artillery used to be called) and fought in the great battles, Aisne-Marne, Oise-Aisne, and Meuse-Argonne. After one heavy engagement, when many prisoners were taken, Bill was standing beside his Commanding Officer when a German Colonel passed by in a truck, as a prisoner, sitting ram-rod straight, proud but tired. Bill snapped a salute to him as he passed, which was instantly returned. Later the C.O. said: "Why did you salute that Colonel?"

"He was a real soldier," said Bill. "Think of the shelling we gave him, and he still able to carry on like that."

"God," said the C.O. after a moment. "I wish I had saluted him, too."

After the war Smith returned to the practice of architecture, working in New York and Pittsburgh; and this he did for many years.

Of late, he was usually to be found in the big chair at the S.E. window of the East Room in the Club. He was the center of a group of earnest thinkers who gathered every day for lunch, among whom he was affectionately known as "Sitting Bill." He read all the time, and acquired a fund of uncommon knowledge; so that he came to be a reliable tribunal to settle bets and accepted as such. He was a simple, friendly man with a good deal of natural leadership. He harbored deep-seated doubts about the existence of the Deity, and was willing to seriously discuss theological matters. He liked the silent church before the service begins better than any preaching—in which he is not alone.

Henry Austin Stickney

An attorney by profession, specializing in corporation law, and a member of the New York Bar, Henry Stickney's life included some brilliant work in military intelligence and liaison with the French in the First World War and, in his younger years, was spiced by dramatic events.

He was born in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1879, of American-born parents, who returned to the United States while Henry was a child. But the elder Stickneys were restless folk and lived in Europe for protracted periods, thus interrupting the boy's school education several times. At seventeen he rebelled, came back and entered Harvard, where his brother, the poet, Trumbull Stickney, had made a brilliant record. Then, just before his senior year he spent his vacation traveling in Europe. Being a strong and daring young man, he did a good deal of mountain climbing in Switzerland. This prepared him for the peril he was to face on the way home.

The steamer Scotsman, on which this lad of twenty was making his way back to Harvard, ran aground on Belle Isle, Newfoundland, in a dense fog. A lifeboat which was lowered capsized and all on board were drowned. After this disaster the other passengers decided to stay on the steamer. When the fog lifted, two ladders were lashed together and with great difficulty fastened to the rocks. On this precarious bridge, passengers and crew got ashore but found themselves at the foot of a nearly sheer precipice some 700 feet high. Stickney and two other men volunteered to climb it to the lighthouse on top and give the alarm so that the others might be rescued. Assisting in this rescue, Stickney made five round trips to the ship and back in the course of a day.

He graduated from Harvard in 1900 and from Columbia Law School in 1903. He then entered the office of Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, and Colt. He later became a partner in that firm and remained in it until his death.

In 1917, he was commissioned a Captain in the Quartermaster Corps of the U.S. Army, left for France early in 1918, and performed his liaison duties with the General Staff of the French Army so well that he won the Legion of Honor.

Stickney was eminently successful in corporation and litigated matters. He brought to his work precision and conscientious care. He was looked upon with respect and affection by his many friends and colleagues.—RB

Anson Phelps Stokes

How, even in so long a span of life, one man could have done so much in so many directions is mysterious to the friends of Anson Phelps Stokes. For he was a clergyman, the secretary of a great university, a fighter for social justice, a nature lover, an educator, a promoter of physical and mental hygiene, and a founder or trustee of literally dozens of welfare and philanthropic organizations. In among all these activities he found time to be a distinguished tennis player, one of the country's first amateur golfers, and an expert trout and salmon fisherman. A devoted Centurion, he was proud that his father, his three brothers, and his two sons were all members.

He was born in Brighton, Staten Island, April 13, 1874. There was a tradition of great wealth through many generations on both sides of his family. His father, for whom he was named, was a banker, a political publicist, and a writer on economics.

From the time young Anson entered Yale, in 1892, the college and the university always held a top place in his attention. Three years after his graduation in 1896, he was appointed Yale's Secretary, a position he held for twenty-two years, during which the college expanded into a university.

In these busy years, he supported the residential college plan, brought the alumni into closer relations with the university in a system which has since altered many other college communities, and he began the effort, continued through life, to build Yale's endowment funds.

A story is told which gives a hint of the generous scale on which his family lived. Once, while he was an undergraduate, he telegraphed his mother, "Arriving Friday with some 96 men." He meant a few members of his class of '96. But Mrs. Stokes took it otherwise. "Can put up only 35," she wired back.

At the time of his appointment at Yale he was studying to be a clergyman at the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, the town of Yale's rival. Later, the job of Secretary—demanding enough, one would suppose—did not keep him from becoming assistant rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in New Haven, a post he held till 1918. When he resigned as Secretary in 1921, he became canon of the National Cathedral in Washington.

His interest in Negro progress was one of the preoccupations of his life. He was, for many years, president of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, devoted largely to Negro education. He was at one time a trustee of Tuskegee Institute. He argued the case for Marian Anderson before the Daughters of the American Revolution, which had opposed her singing in Constitution Hall. His brief for Miss Anderson was later published under the title Art and the Color Line.

A few titles of organizations he served as director or trustee suggest the scope of his enthusiasms. Among them are Wellesley College, the International Education Board, the Rockefeller Foundation, the American Academy in Rome, the Negro Encyclopedia, the Brookings Institution, and Yale-in-China.

His three-volume book, Church and State in the United States was published in 1950. It was, Alvin Johnson wrote in the American Historical Review, "without question the most extensive treatment of the historical development of the separation of church and state that has ever been published."

When he was in New York, he often had lunch at the Century. He liked people. He made new friends at the Long Table and drew them into conversation about their special interests. Once he planned a private dinner for a group of persons interested in race relations. To avoid any misunderstanding, he consulted the House Committee in advance. No, they said, there could not be the slightest objection to his Negro guests. But if he intended to bring ladies into the Club, he must go elsewhere!

We whom he has left in the Century are proud that Anson Phelps Stokes was with us for half a century.—RB

Frederick Joseph Holden Sutton

Fred Sutton graduated from Princeton in 1898, and wrote the Class Ode, which is still rated high. He was class secretary, and interested and active in Princeton affairs all his days. He led kind of a double life: he earned a living by being vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Company, but among his friends he was a discriminating lover of literature and a highly qualified amateur of the arts. The separation between these personalities was so profound that many of his old cronies would have been astonished to learn he was a banker.

He was prominent in the Grolier Club, where for years he had served on the Council, and his own library revealed his cultivated taste in its fine bindings and rare volumes. Another interest took him into the field of old pewter, in which he showed his knowledge and judgment by the extensive collection he had assembled.

After his retirement, not to a Sabine farm—though this would have been quite in keeping with his classical taste—but to one in Amenia, New York, he developed a liking for country life, which he found so absorbing that his former haunts in the billiard room and library saw him far too seldom. But he used to turn up for Saturday lunch at "the corner table" by the fireplace, and converse with the good companions; and then the "hard core" would move into the Graham Library and talk around the fire till Fred had to go get his train to the country. He was grave and gay, learned and tolerant, and one of the kindest and sweetest of men.

Princeton has had much reason to be grateful to this, her son. During his lifetime and afterward he made important contributions to the College, among others, as gifts to the Library, and in the installation of a noble window in the Chapel dedicated to the memory of three Katharines, the donor's grandmother, mother, and wife.

Calvin Tomkins, Jr.

Calvin Tomkins, Jr., prepared for college at the Horace Mann School, and then studied at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He was a construction executive, and for many years a director of the Newark Plaster Company.

At the age of twenty-six, it was his fortune to inherit an ample competence, and he made the most of it in terms of gracious and civilized living. His interests were many, and his knowledge in every field of them was thorough, though not exhaustive. He traveled widely, and at one time developed a passion for the arts of India, which resulted in his ownership of a magnificent head of Buddha.

He read extensively in the field of Medieval and Renaissance history and literature, and gathered a fine library as a result, He had sensitivity in the arts, and was himself a good amateur painter. He owned some really good paintings and a voluminous portfolio of worth-while etchings. He could discuss on equal terms with experts in every field that he touched. His genius lay in conversation and friendship. His comments were always perceptive, and at times brilliant. Unhappily, he never set pen to paper, so that these will evaporate in the mists of time.

His public services were brought on only by emergencies, and were brief. He was a flier in the First World War, and prized his wings among his dearest possessions. He served nobly as assistant director in the New York Relief Organization in 1935; and a hard job it was. After each of these excursions he reverted happily to reading and the elegant entertainment of friends at his homes in New York, or Sneedens Landing, or Nonquitt, or on his sailboat in Buzzards Bay. It amused him to serve fine meals of exotic dishes and fine wines, often prepared by himself.

All in all, he was a charming example of that perfect product of civilization, the amateur-gentleman-scholar. It is good that our country should develop such from time to time, and that they should gravitate to the Century.

Tertius Van Dyke

Tertius Van Dyke graduated from Princeton (Phi Beta Kappa) in 1908 and from Union Theological Seminary in 1913. Later he took the M.A. at Oxford.

Like his father, he was a Presbyterian minister, and he started out by being pastor of the old Spring Street Church in one of the most depressed areas of the City. After service in the First World War, and then as secretary to his father at The Hague, he came back to New York, and became pastor of the Park Avenue Church. After six years, however, he resigned to serve as minister to the Congregational Church in Washington (Connecticut), then as Headmaster of the Gunnery School, and finally as Dean of Hartford Theological Seminary until his retirement in 1954.

Van Dyke was a natural teacher; but being an ordained clergyman he was under some pressure to follow that calling.

This produced a restless variety in his occupations, but at the end he managed a happy combination at Hartford Seminary, where he could put everything he knew to good advantage without being unduly bothered by the details of living.

He was gentle and winsome in spirit but exceedingly orderly in his conduct of affairs. Perhaps his outstanding characteristics were forthrightness and friendliness. He never failed to make his own position clear on any matter, however controversial; but he always did so gracefully and with disarming understanding of the other man's point of view. His relations with his Maker were clear and uncomplicated, and ultimately determinative of what he made of his life.

William Young Westervelt

William Y. Westervelt was born on the Jersey City Heights in 1872. He graduated from the Columbia School of Mines in 1894, and, in turn, worked at being a chemist, surveyor, engineer, and superintendent of mines for the Ducktown Sulphur, Copper, & Iron Co. in Tennessee. He was a shrewd and capable engineer, and after a time he was able to put some mining companies together at Ducktown and became president of the combine. Meanwhile, he worked as a mining engineer, all over the West from Montana to Arizona, traveling here and there, inspecting mines, making appraisals for bond issues, and consulting on production methods. He even made a report on the copper mines in the Island of Cyprus in the Mediterranean.

Westervelt was well known to the copper fraternity and highly respected. His handbook Mine Examinations, Valuations, and Reports was a standard work used all over the world.

He lived the latter years of his life in Jackson, Mississippi. He never recovered from the shock of his wife's death, which came two months before his.
